

Vira Nasikivska, PhD student of the International Relations Department, took part in the XXXII Eastern European Summer school for young scholars that was held in Warsaw from 12 to 23 September, 2022. The program of the School consisted of a series of lectures and seminars conducted by prominent professors from well-known universities of Poland. The School was primarily aimed at the young scholars gaining experience in the chosen research fields and getting acquainted with the latest trends and practices in the humanities.

Considerable attention within the framework of the XXXII Eastern European Summer school was paid to the war that Russia is waging against Ukraine and the impact it has on the political and academic environment of Eastern Europe.

Vira Nasikivska had the opportunity to deliver a lecture to the participants of the School on the topic “The Ideology of Russian Militarism: the Role of the Russian Orthodox Church”.

With Helena Krasowska, the professor at the University of Warsaw

With Leszek Zasztowt, the professor at the University of Warsaw

Professors and participants of the School